PATHWAY

We are the UK's leading homeless health charity

Our purpose is to improve the health of people experiencing homelessness and other forms of severe social exclusion. We work within and alongside the NHS to share good practice and specialist expertise, provide training and support to staff, and campaign for lasting change.

Homelessness is dangerous. People experiencing homelessness die at shockingly younger ages than the general population, and very often from treatable medical conditions. We challenge this health injustice by improving access to better quality care and supporting people out of homelessness.

Hospital-based Pathway Teams

Led by doctors and nurses, our approach is rooted in the evidence of what works. We help the NHS set up, train and support specialist homeless health teams ('Pathway Teams') in hospitals.

Last year eight Pathway Teams supported 3,400 homeless patients in hospital and reduced returns to the street by 43%.

Lived Experience Volunteers

Pathway's volunteers bring their own personal experience of homelessness and of challenges accessing healthcare, helping to guide Pathway and other services towards more authentic, sustainable change.

“It's not just our volunteers' experience of homelessness, but their skills and individuality that enrich everything we do and help us find better solutions.”

Mandy Pattinson Programme Manager, Pathway

Manzoor

Originally from Bangladesh, Manzoor has been through many challenges, including homelessness. He is passionate about improving health outcomes for others affected by homelessness. Part of the project team from the beginning, Manzoor believes in a garden's power to create a real sense of belonging.

Ross

Ross volunteers with Pathway to give back to those facing exclusion from healthcare while experiencing homelessness. Following his own turbulent journey, he is now a proud and active member of Pathway: delivering training, speaking at conferences, and helping to shape this RHS Chelsea garden!
